In 1996, brothers, Ron and Rick Champan, put their long-time dream into action – getting ahead of the craft brew curve and opening a brew pub in the heart of their hometown of Coronado, California. By 2010, Coronado Brewing Co. was brewing about 5,000 barrels of beer per year, allowing them to expand their reach beyond California. As the company continued to grow, so did their brewery with a move into a 22,000 sq. ft. building in 2012.

In only a short time at the new facility, Coronado Brewing Co. began to face challenges common to breweries with sealed concrete floors – cracking and degradation from thermal temperature swings and chemical onslaughts. In addition, the wet floor put them at risk for injuries. The solution was simple: a new floor manufactured and installed by Stonhard. A Stonhard floor withstands the harsh environment of a brewery, including thermal shock and cycling, as well as chemical attack. Stonhard floors are also easy to clean and maintain.

As a recent recipient of a top award in the beer industry, Coronado's production schedule was running on high gear, so it was important for the new floor to be installed without interfering with their rigorous production schedule. Stonhard's experienced installation crew prepped the existing substrate and installed Stonclad UT within a short period of time, including work during evening hours to ensure minimal impact. Stonhard's crew also took additional care with the intricate work around the equipment to prevent any damage.

In addition to essential durability features, Stonclad UT provides the facility with the proper level of texture for a slip-resistant surface without compromising ease of maintenance and sanitation. The final result is a facility equipped with a heavy-duty, long-lasting seamless floor to coincide with award-winning products produced by the coast-to-coast Coronado Brewing Co.
